Suppose we all woke up one orning to find ourselves on a ship going through the ocean at a speed of eighteen miles a second, the captain of the ship invisible, known to us only by faith, our boat traveling around a huge lighthouse, itself in motion, going faster than we, and dragging us with

Certainly we should be interested in such a marvelona awakening. We should ask continually, "whither are we going, when and where do we land; what are those ships in the distance that seem to be traveling with us; when shall we see and speak with our captain?"

On exactly such a voyage we and ourselves when we come into life on this planet. The earth, going day and night eighteen miles a second, is our ship. The sun is the great central light and power house. The planets sharing our sun's light, heat and power are the ships sailing with us. "Each breath that we draw is inhaled at a distance of a score or more of miles from where the last inspiration was taken."

inspiration was taken." If you were in an automobile that carried you twenty miles, from here to the next town be-tween breaths, that would interest you. How many are interested in the great voyage, the marvelous journey through the ocean of space and ether, the voyage begun by this little earth at least a thousand million years ago, and des-tined to continue, with our de-scendants as passengers, for mil-lions of years to come?

One thing, BIGNESS, interests all Americans; Niagara, Mississippi, State of Texas, Rocky mountains fill us with national pride because they are so big. But for real vastness you must go from our earth and outside of our solar system, beyond the path followed by our sun, dragging Earth, Mars, Venus, Saturn, Jupiter and the other planets and planetoids with

Our earth is about ninety-three million miles from the sun. Mars, an older planet, traveling beyond our orbit, averages 141,000,000 miles, sometimes coming as close as 128,000,000, sometimes going out as far as 155,000,000. Beyond Mars is Giant Jupiter, 482,000,000 miles from the sun. Beyond Jupiter, Saturn, 885,000,000 miles from the sun, traveling more than 5,000,000,000 miles, taking 10,759 days, nearly thirty years, to go round the sun once.

Beyond Saturn travels Uranus, discovered by Herschel, and far beyond Uranus Neptune, invisible to the eye, hard to find with a telescope. Before anybody had seen it, astronomers, led by Newton's law, knew it must be there, because of the "pulling energy" that it displayed, dragging another planet, Uranus, out of its natural

All these distances and big figures are as nothing compared with the distances outside of the little planet family that travels with our sun in space as little chickens travel around an old hen walking across the field. Other suns, some a million times as big as our sun (our sun is a million times as big as this earth) lie at distances so vast that we cannot conceive them. A map of the sun and its nearest sun neighbor, drawn to scale, would show our earth one inch from the sun, and the nearest "outside" sun twelve miles farther away on the map.

In other words, a map with one inch equal to 93,000,000 miles, would have to be twelve miles wide to show the nearest sun, or "fixed

Post Armed Volunteers In Many Danger Spots Throughout Country.

DUBLIN, May 30 .- Ireland is virtually an armed camp today.

British troops and local constabulary are stationed in force throughout Dublin, while at other points where trouble has occurred recently armed voluneers are guarding against possible disorders. Motor lorries, tanks, and heavy artillery are in position about Dublin. A solid cordon of troops is guarding the outskirts of the city.

While no outrages were reported today, British authorities feared repetition of the outburst at Louth when a band of twenty armed men "captured" the town and held it for several hours against British soldiery. The band set fire to the local police station, the court house, and other public buildings. They also halted several church services, forcing the worshipers to gather straw with which to set the buildings afire.
